

DELANEY GREEN is a policy analyst specializing in issues of economic and racial justice in the criminal legal system. She currently works as an instructor for the Berkeley School of Law at the University of California and supervises clinical students on juvenile fee abolition efforts in the Gulf South. She moved from Louisiana to pursue her Master of Public Policy at UC Berkeley, where she specialized in public budget and fiscal policy in the criminal and juvenile systems. Prior to joining the Policy Advocacy Clinic's nationwide effort for debt free justice, she worked as a policy consultant for the California State Assembly Committee on Budget, and the San Francisco Financial Justice Project at the Office of the Treasurer and Tax Collector. She currently lives in Oakland with her dogs, Aimé and Ramona.